

Powdered Wings - A Love Addicts Escape From A Billion Dollar Ghetto

Dear Reader, (Why I'd like you to share this fictional journey) You are me. I shall prove it. Sometime in the spring of 1992, the Secret Service had me wired for my participation in a counterfeiting ring. My billionaire grandfather who had just been exposed for molesting my sister, bailed me out of jail, and was attempting along with the counterfeiters, to kill me. My attorney conspired against me. My sister was put in the hospital for breaking the silence on Grandpa. When my buddy flew me to my home town of Miami to be a supporting lead in his movie, my mother tried to seduce me, literally, and then bribed me to help her institutionalize my sister. She then hoped for me to aid in Grandpa's evasion from his SEC indictments, which were the culmination of the Milken Junk Bond Scandal. I had been conspirator, witness, and victim to it all. These were the best things that ever happened to me. And now twenty years later I get to look back at this story I told myself, and see if writing my way into the future worked. Yes it was all fiction and so is tomorrow depending on the expectations you craft today. I'm 47 now. I'm in Thailand in a 5 dollar a night room, writing and exploring synchronicities: like the pink river dolphin in Burma who trained villagers to catch the fish he stuns with his echolocation (research for my new book); and the stem cell pioneer, an old friend I just met up with, who is now curing me of herpes? I'm also preparing for re-entry into the world for my August estate trial in which my mom left 40 million to her dogs and bodyguards. I'm living the life of a self-proclaimed monk whose faith is Dolphinology: My own belief system based on Bon Buhism in which monks use every night as a chance to practice dying, by learning to wake up in their dreams. I've been on two 10 plus day silent meditations this past two years. The balance and calm from needing no-thing outside of my own heart reflecting on the witness watching my stillness, allows me to play in the world with a spiritual goal and moment to moment inner smile. Sure, sometimes the smog and noise and the false consumerist reality over-whelm. But rarely. My mother passed away and left over 40 million dollars to her dogs and bodyguards and I look at it as a gift. After all she died in my arms, an hour before, a tear streaming down her comatose face. I knew she heard me when I told her I forgive her and I know she forgives me. I told her that a new imaginal realm was coming and that she is loved and free to be safely guided. I told her about how dolphins can consciously dream and that she should look around and realize how quickly it all passed and that only her open heart and imagination will guide her next moves. And Im thinking now, Her souls imagination will make sure she is guided if she doesnt have the skills of the dolphinologist I hope to be, Meanwhile, months after her death, I know Im being delivered the opportunities co-created with her to be of service to my own mission, partly which involves sharing my journey that you may find some possibilities on your own path. I sat in a deposition being harshly interrogated by the people I was suing for taking advantage of my mother, and I excused myself for a break. I went outside and did a few yoga postures and closed my eyes, raising them behind my eyelids sending my brain the signal to slow down. I breathed deeply and centered. When I came back in, the first question was, did you just take medication. I felt the jealousy when I said, Meditation Medication. They asked three times, Medication medication... what? We are all looking for the witness that has thrown us into a body that gives amnesia to our souls past, in order to play a game of remembering our original creative power, which is all... So lets go back now to 1992 and reflect with this new perspective, once in a while, and tell the story of how I got to this place of peace.... After I returned from Miami, in this fic
