

Feminism and Political Theory

This volume collects some of today's most original and important work at the intersection of feminism and political theory. A representative and wide-ranging set of readings on feminist political thought, the authors provide large-scale critiques, and in some instances reconstructions, of important strains in political thought, including notions of equality, rights-based justice, and contract theories. The fourteen essays are organized around four major themes: The Question of a Different Voice: Care, Justice, and Rights, Equality and Inequality in Politics and Elsewhere, Coercion versus Consent, Public versus Private, and Sexuality, and Trust and Responsibility.
