

Ones Food is Anothers Poison: Find Hidden Allergies

Allergies are great masqueraders. They can mimic almost any ailment and can affect any part of the body. Foods considered healthy for the general population behave like slow poisons in those who are sensitive to them. High blood pressure, arthritis, chronic fatigue, food addictions, insomnia, depression, fluid retention, muscle spasms, hyperactivity, colitis, migraine headaches, eczema, psoriasis, ear infections these and dozens of other conditions can be caused entirely by food allergies. If you have chronic symptoms of any kind, especially any for which doctors are unable to find a cause, a hidden food allergy is very likely undermining your health. Unless you know how to look for hidden food allergies, you are unlikely to find them. Skin prick tests are unreliable because some food molecules can have no effect on your skin but negative consequences if you consume them. One food can produce different symptoms in different people and one symptom can be produced by different foods in different people. Professor Rowland shows you how to make sense of all this, to find your particular allergies, and how to take corrective measures. Author David W. Rowland is recognized as a leading edge innovator in the field of nutrition. His unique Nutri-Body method of assessment is favored by practitioners for pinpointing nutritional and biochemical weaknesses. David also publishes Nutritiapedia, the free on-line nutritional encyclopedia.
